CPYRGHT DISCUSSION OF VARIOUS INTELLIGENCE ACTIVITIES

BARRY GRAY: I want to hear some of the espionage.

NOEL BEHN: Oh, well, I heard a couple of wild stories out in California. I bumped into an Englishman.

* * *

Now, you know, all of these--you can never be sure of this, because espionage is really the greatest shaggy dog area of all, and everyone will tell you things authoritatively, but this man did have very good credentials, had worked with British Intelligence during World War II. He told me two stories that sort of fascinated me.

One was--and apparently he said this is recorded--one deals with Allen Dulles admitting to a major error. Apparently during World War I, when he was stationed in Switzerland, a man tried to see him. This man tried five times to see him. Secretary didn't know him, said he had a foreign accent. The man kept coming back. Didn't know his name. And Dulles didn't see him. That night the
